

Safe emergency evacuation

Ensuring you have an emergency evacuation plan in place is a crucial part of your health and safety responsibilities to your staff and residents.

Your detailed evacuation plan will take into account any mobility or hearing issues that residents may have, and the difficulties you may encounter within your building when moving residents, should a fire break out.

Ensuring your staff know what to do in the event of a fire is a crucial element of your fire safety plans. As stated in the Regulatory Reform (Fire Safety) Order 2005, fire safety training is a legal requirement for all employees. Fire safety training covers how to spot a fire risk, what to do in the event of a fire, and can also provide hands-on experience of using a portable fire extinguisher.

Involving your staff in the development of evacuation procedures, and ensuring they undertake fire evacuation training, you can rest assured that should a fire break out, residents and staff can act calmly and safely.
